Dear Mr. Sreenivasa Chakravarthi Sangapu:

The paper "Online Solution Based on Machine Learning for IT Project Management in Software Factory Companies" has been submitted to 2021 13th International Conference on Computational Intelligence and Communication Networks (CICN). It has the following abstract:

Project Portfolio Management is very important for the growth of companies because it favors planning several possibilities in each scenario. Project Portfolio Management intends to manage resources to plan, control, and execute successful projects and obtain the strategic objectives of the organizations. In Project Portfolio Management, a lot of data is generated daily, which is important for the planning of new projects in companies; consequently, this need arises to create models that help to process and interpret this data. In this context, Machine Learning as an expression of Artificial Intelligence is presented as an alternative and technological enabler that allows a system, by itself and in an automated way, to learn to discover patterns, trends, and relationships in data; it is presented as an engine of digital transformation of business, which many organizations are adopting and its demand is growing. Therefore, this paper aims to compile and review the proposals made to implement Machine Learning in Project Portfolio Management.

We believe that this paper falls within your area of expertise and would appreciate if you could serve as the TPC member responsible for handling this paper. Please confirm that you have received this assignment and indicate whether you accept at

Dear Dr Kumar,

As the Editor of the journal Journal of Ambient Intelligence and Humanized Computing I want to ask you if you could review the article "Tunicate Swarm Grey Wolf Optimization for Multi-Path Routing Protocol in IoT assisted WSN Networks" for a possible publication in our journal.

This is the abstract:

Internet of Things (IoT) have become popular for connected people as well as objects for collecting and exchanging data based on embedded sensors. In IoT-assisted Wireless sensor Networks (WSN), the nodes are considered as the resource parameters in several ways, like computing resources, energy resources, and storage resources such that the robust multipath routing protocols are needed for maintaining long network lifetime and for achieving higher energy utilization. Hence, this paper presents the multipath routing protocol using the proposed optimization method, named Tunicate swarm grey wolf optimization (TSGWO) algorithm in the IoT assisted WSN network. By multipath routing protocol, the multipath is designed by multipath source node to several destinations. The multipath source node forwarding packet to multiple destinations simultaneously. At first, the nodes in IoT-assisted WSN network is simulated together and performs the cluster head selection using Fractional Gravitational Search algorithm (FGSA), and then the multipath routing process is done on the basis of proposed TSGWO in which the routing path is selected by considering the fitness parameters, like QoS parameters and trust factors. The QoS parameters include the delay, energy, link lifetime, as well as distance. The path with the minimum distance is selected as optimal path using fitness parameter. The proposed optimization algorithm effectively performs the multipath routing mechanism by integrating the parametric features from both the optimization algorithm. After that, the route maintenance process is carried out in the simulated IoT network to recover the link breakage based on DRINA. The proposed TSGWO outperformed other methods with maximal average Residual energy of 2.161J, maximal link lifetime of 0.075sec, maximal PDR of 96.38%, and maximal throughput of 429.49Kbps.

SPECIAL SESSION

ON

AI Challenges in the implementation of Real-Time IoT Applications

Theme of the Session:

We are living in the era of 4th Industrial revolution – the evolution which is based on extreme automation of machine to machine communication, not only just the communication but way beyond. Machines can understand each other, negotiate with each other, sign and execute the contracts with each other. They can predict each other's behavior, and able to sort of establish a social network of machines. This type of network is self-sustaining and can run without much intervention of humans. At the heart of this exciting 4th revolution is some of the advanced technologies at work. Artificial Intelligence, Machine Learning, Sensing, Internet of Things, Big Data, Analytics, Cloud Implementation and Edge computing to name a few. It is amazing to see and experience, how this complex mesh of technologies works together to produce incredible outcomes. The results promise to significantly cut the cost of production, improve overall productivity, improve product and process quality, reduce downtime, etc. The general purpose of this special session in IEEE ICCSEA 2020 conference is to bring together researchers, academicians and sector employees from different fields and disciplines and provide them an independent platform to exchange information on their researches, ideas and findings.

Scope and Interest:

- Toward an Elastic IoT Fog Framework for AI Services
- Application of Artificial Intelligence Technology
- Decision-making problems: Application to Real-Time
- AI-augmented geographic routing approach for IoT-based incident-supporting applications
- Dense Moving Fog for Intelligent IoT: Key Challenges and Opportunities
- Internet of things and cloud computing on healthcare systems: opportunities, challenges, and open problems
- AI Safety: Research Problems Impeding Routine and Safe Real-world Application of Evolution
- Edge-native Distributed Platform for Artificial Intelligence
- Internet of Things (IoT): Applications, investments, and challenges for enterprises

Publication:

All accepted and presented papers will be published in the proceedings of the 2020 International Conference on Computer Science, Engineering and Applications (ICCSEA) and included in the IEEE Xplore digital library. IEEE Conference Record #49143.

Important Dates:

Paper submission deadline: 20th January 2020

"An Efficient Claim Management Assurance System using EPC Contract based on Improved Monarch Butterfly Optimization Model"

In general, the EPC contract systems have been used widely to perform numerous construction works by the private sector. The most common issue in the construction industries are the flow effects that results in less productivity and less efficiency. To overcome such short comings, this paper demonstrates an Improved Monarch Butterfly Optimization Algorithm (IMBOA) based claim management system using the Engineering Procurement Construction (EPC) concept. The time delay and cost associated with the construction projects are taken as the objectives of the paper. In order to obtain these objectives, the design substitutes or the construction techniques that satisfy the minimum requirements of the Engineer are selected and after that, the project manager views the document with respect to the time delay and cost and makes the final decision. Moreover, along with the EPC and the claim management, this paper utilizes an IMBOA to obtain an effective and quality system with minimum cost and time delay. The experimental analysis for the EPC approach is reviewed in terms of utilizing the case study related to the coal mining industry in China. The time delay and cost

Dear Dr Rangari,

Some weeks ago you reviewed the above mentioned manuscript. The authors have changed it according to your proposals. Please check it again concerning the publication in Journal of Ambient Intelligence and Humanized Computing.

This is the abstract:

The Engineering Procurement Construction (EPC) contract systems have been widely used to perform numerous constructions works by the private sector. The most common issues in the construction industries are cash flow, which resulted in lower productivity and efficiency. To overcome such shortcomings, the authors have developed an Improved Monarch Butterfly Optimization Algorithm (IMBOA) based claim management system using EPC concept. The existing construction models are capable of optimizing only a single objective, such as time, cost, delay, etc., which is not efficient in improving the performance of the model. The proposed IMBOA algorithm is capable of optimizing multi-objective (time and cost), which simultaneously increases the quality of the project and improves the performance. In this system, the time delay and cost associated with the construction projects are taken as factors the objectives of the paper. Along with the EPC and the claim management, the researchers have utilized an IMBOA to obtain effective and quality system with minimum cost and time delay. The experimental analysis for the EPC approach was evaluated by utilizing the case study related to the coal mining industry in China. The time delay and cost optimization conducted for the coal mining case study indicated that the calculated values are minimized based on the fitness function. The proposed IMBOA approach can mitigate 23% of risks and avoid 32% of risks associated with the action plan of the coal mining industry of China. . The IMBOA model developed showed better results while comparing with other optimization models.

Dear Dr. Jayatheja,

Thank you for accepting our invitation as a reviewer.

We would be grateful if you would review a paper entitled "The Role of Civil Engineering in Achieving UN Sustainable Development Goals"

This is the abstract: The United Nations, 17 sustainable development goals (SDGs) with 169 targets, are envisaged to tackle the key social, economic, and environmental challenges that exist throughout the world and provide a framework to ensure peace and prosperity for people and life on the planet. Engineers, in particular, civil engineers, play a vital role in deploying innovative, sustainable, and nature-based solutions beyond the traditional engineering practices to overcome global issues and deliver SDGs. The solutions or holistic approach to attaining SDGs must corroborate a harmony with nature rather than incorporating 'Green' features to conventional approaches. Civil engineers must adopt long-term self-sustaining state-of-the-art technologies to minimize the carbon footprint and fulfill the needs of future generations without exploiting ample natural resources. Innovative civil engineering approaches should mitigate the impact of climate change on the environment, address water supply and sanitation issues, develop resilient infrastructure, conserve and restore life on land and underwater, reduce poverty and guarantee food security to the growing population. Therefore, addressing the global challenges with sustainable practices would automatically aid in achieving SDG's. The present work highlights the prominent role of civil engineers to meet all the 17 SDGs by 2030. Furthermore, the current study also emphasizes the necessity of partnerships to attain interdependent SDGs
